Rightful Compensation for a Wrongful Conviction: In Defense of a Compensation Statute in the State of Wyoming

Meridith J. Heneage

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.law.uwyo.edu/wlr

Recommended Citation

This Comment is brought to you for free and open access by Law Archive of Wyoming Scholarship. It has been accepted for inclusion in Wyoming Law Review by an authorized editor of Law Archive of Wyoming Scholarship.
“The innocent person released after years of wrongful incarceration . . . they’re on the courthouse steps with their lawyers looking very triumphant. That person gets nothing from the state, no transportation home, no home, no apology, nothing.”

I. INTRODUCTION

II. An “UNREAL DREAM:” BACKGROUND ON THE INNOCENCE MOVEMENT
   A. Wrongful Convictions and Exonerations
   B. Compensating Exonerees

III. WYOMING’S INNOCENCE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY: A TIMELINE
   A. 2008: Post-Conviction DNA Testing
   B. 2014: Senate File 28 and Senate File 30
   C. 2018: Determination of Factual Innocence

IV. WYOMING MUST ADOPT A HOLISTIC COMPENSATION STATUTE
   A. Compensation Should Be Holistic
      1. What Compensation Should Include: It is not Just About Money
      2. A Cap on Compensation is Unwarranted
   B. The Process and Burden Placed on the Claimant Should be Minimal
   C. Andrew Johnson and the State’s Responsibility to Compensate Exonerees

V. CONCLUSION

* J.D. candidate, University of Wyoming College of Law, May 2020. I want to especially thank Professor Lauren McLane for her support and guidance throughout this process. This Comment is dedicated to Andrew Johnson, who bravely told his story and inspired this advocacy. And to all who have been wrongfully convicted and who continue to suffer—may you find justice and peace.

1 A Struggle for Basic Survival: Frederick Clay’s Life Post-Exoneration, INNOCENCE PROJECT: NEWS (Sept. 26, 2018), https://www.innocenceproject.org/frederick-clay-s-life-post-exoneration/ (quoting Sharon Beckman, Director of the Boston College Innocence Program) (explaining the story of Fred Clay who, after spending almost forty years in prison, survived on food stamps and struggled to find work without a college degree following his wrongful conviction at just seventeen years old).
I. INTRODUCTION

On June 11, 1989, in Cheyenne, Wyoming, a 9-1-1 dispatcher received a distressed phone call from the second-floor tenant of a multiple story apartment building. The tenant described aggressive knocking, footsteps, and glass breaking in the apartment above hers.

When the police arrived, the third-floor tenant informed them that a man had broken into her apartment and raped her. In the apartment, police found the driver’s license of Andrew Johnson, an acquaintance of the victim who had been with her earlier that night. The victim was taken to the hospital and underwent a sexual assault examination. A few days later, based on identification from the victim and his driver’s license being present at the scene, police arrested Johnson and charged him with aggravated burglary and first-degree sexual assault.

At trial, a crime laboratory analyst testified that DNA results presented that Johnson was within the 5% of the population who could have been the source of the semen detected in the rape kit. On September 27, 1989, a jury convicted Johnson, and the judge sentenced him to life in prison. The Wyoming Supreme Court upheld his conviction and sentence in 1991.

Throughout the years of exhausted appeals, Johnson always maintained his innocence. In 2012, the Rocky Mountain Innocence Center (RMIC), which had been working on Johnson’s case, discovered that the victim’s fiancé at the time of the assault had been abusive. Additionally, Johnson’s original attorney had never investigated the fiancé’s alibi to determine whether he was truly out of town as he had claimed. RMIC subsequently filed for post-conviction DNA

---

3 Id.
4 Id.
5 Id.
6 Id.
7 Id.
8 Id.
9 Id.
11 Possley, supra note 2.
12 Id.
13 Id.
testing of the semen from the rape kit.\textsuperscript{14} The post-conviction DNA results both excluded Johnson as a source of the semen, and conclusively identified the victim's fiancé as the source.\textsuperscript{15} Based on the post-conviction DNA results, Johnson filed a motion for a new trial in March of 2013.\textsuperscript{16} On July 19, 2013, the Laramie County District Attorney's office dismissed the case. On August 7, 2013, over two decades after his wrongful conviction, the court granted Johnson the first order of actual innocence in the state of Wyoming.\textsuperscript{17}

Andrew Johnson was wrongfully convicted at thirty-nine years old and was sixty-three years old when he finally regained his freedom.\textsuperscript{18} Johnson left prison with severe health problems and entirely dependent on his relatives for support.\textsuperscript{19} He did not have a job, health insurance, a car, or retirement income.\textsuperscript{20} Since Wyoming is one of seventeen states without compensation legislation for exonerees of wrongful convictions, Johnson was not entitled to any compensation from the State for the loss of twenty-four years of his freedom.\textsuperscript{21}

In response to the injustices that wrongful convictions and years of incarceration place on exonerees, this Comment advocates for the passage of a compensation statute in Wyoming.\textsuperscript{22} This Comment advocates for the passage of such a statute by addressing concerns previously raised by the Legislature when a proposed compensation statute failed in 2014.\textsuperscript{23} Part II of this Comment provides an overview of wrongful convictions, exonerations, and methods of compensation.\textsuperscript{24} Part III covers Wyoming's innocence legislative history, focusing specifically on the compensation bill that was proposed in 2014 but failed.\textsuperscript{25}

\textsuperscript{14} \textit{Our Exonerees, Andrew Johnson}, \textsc{Rocky Mountain Innocence Ctr.} (2019), http://rminnocence.org/our-exonerees/andrew-johnson.html (explaining the RMIC successfully motioned for DNA testing after previously passing a new law in Wyoming which allowed prisoners to petition for DNA testing in order to prove their innocence).

\textsuperscript{15} Possley, \textit{infra} note 2.

\textsuperscript{16} \textit{Our Exonerees, Andrew Johnson}, \textit{infra} note 14.

\textsuperscript{17} Id.

\textsuperscript{18} Possley, \textit{infra} note 2.

\textsuperscript{20} Id.

\textsuperscript{22} See \textit{infra} notes 89–160 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{23} See \textit{infra} notes 71–83 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{24} See \textit{infra} notes 27–61 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{25} See \textit{infra} notes 62–87 and accompanying text.
IV addresses the reasons for the bill’s failure and provides recommendations for the Legislature to help draft a future compensation bill that is holistic, effective, and consistent with the best innocence legislation in the country.26

II. An “Unreal Dream:” Background on the Innocence Movement

The path to receiving compensation for a wrongful imprisonment is generally three steps: a wrongful conviction, an exoneration, and then ultimately compensation for wrongful imprisonment.27

A. Wrongful Convictions and Exonerations

A wrongful conviction occurs when an innocent person is convicted of a crime they did not commit.28 In 1989, the first DNA exoneration took place in the United States.29 This exoneration alarmingly illustrated that wrongful convictions can and do occur, and are scientifically provable.30 Wrongful convictions occur for a variety of reasons, the most common of which are eyewitness misidentification, perjury or false accusation, false confession, false or misleading forensic evidence, and official misconduct.31

An exoneration occurs when a court determines a convicted individual is factually innocent and relieves them of all consequences of the criminal conviction based on new evidence.32 The Innocence Project, founded in 1992, is a national 26 See infra notes 89–160 and accompanying text.

29 Gary Dotson, INNOCENCE PROJECT, https://www.innocenceproject.org/cases/gary-dotson (last visited Apr. 7, 2019) (detailing the story of Gary Dotson, who served ten years in prison for aggravated kidnapping and rape based on flawed serology, inaccurate hair analysis, and misidentification). Nine years after his conviction, Dotson’s attorney had DNA tests conducted that were unavailable at the time of trial. Id. The tests revealed that the semen could not have come from Dotson and his conviction was overturned in 1989. Id.
30 Id.
32 See Glossary, Nat’l Registry of Exonerations, https://www.law.umich.edu/special/exoneration/Pages/glossary.aspx (last visited Feb 18, 2019). “A person has been exonerated if he or she was convicted of a crime and, following a post-conviction re-examination of the evidence in the case, was either: (1) declared to be factually innocent by a government official or agency with the authority to make that declaration; or (2) relieved of all the consequences of the criminal conviction by a government official or body with the authority to take that action. The official action may be: (i) a complete pardon by a governor or other competent authority, whether or not the pardon is designated as based on innocence; (ii) an acquittal of all charges factually related to the crime for which the person was originally convicted; or (iii) a dismissal of all charges related

https://scholarship.law.uwyo.edu/wlr/vol19/iss2/8
leader in DNA exonerations and criminal justice reform. To date, the Innocence Project is responsible for 365 DNA exonerations nationally, and has identified 160 actual criminals with the assistance of DNA tests. Additionally, the National Registry of Exonerations provides a comprehensive collection of every known exoneration in the United States since 1989. The database currently documents 2,426 known exonerations, including the DNA exonerations detailed by the Innocence Project. Nationally, the wrongfully convicted will spend an average of fourteen years behind bars before being exonerated. This accounts for more than 20,645 years of freedom lost.

Founded in 2000, the Rocky Mountain Innocence Center (RMIC), affiliated with the Innocence Project, provides innocence work in Nevada, to the crime for which the person was originally convicted, by a court or by a prosecutor with the authority to enter that dismissal. The pardon, acquittal, or dismissal must have been the result, at least in part, of evidence of innocence that either (i) was not presented at the trial at which the person was convicted; or (ii) if the person pled guilty, was not known to the defendant and the defense attorney, and to the court, at the time the plea was entered. The evidence of innocence need not be an explicit basis for the official action that exonerated the person. A person who otherwise qualifies has not been exonerated if there is unexplained physical evidence of that person’s guilt.” Id. Factually innocent means that “a person did not engage in the conduct for which he was convicted; did not engage in conduct constituting a lesser included or inchoate offense of the crime for which he was convicted; and did not commit any other crime arising out of or reasonably connected to the facts supporting the indictment or information upon which he was convicted.” Wyo. Stat. Ann., § 7-12-402 (2018).

33 About, INNOCENCE PROJECT (2019), https://www.innocenceproject.org/about/. The Innocence Project litigation department works to address the leading causes of wrongful convictions and to advocate for legislative reform while promoting laws that ensure access to post-conviction DNA testing, evidence retention, and compensation for those wrongfully convicted and incarcerated. Id. The Innocence Project’s social work department helps exonerees rebuild their lives after years of incarceration. Id.

34 DNA Exonerations in the United States, INNOCENCE PROJECT (2019), https://www.innocenceproject.org/dna-exonerations-in-the-united-states/. As of the writing of this Comment, the actual perpetrators of these crimes have gone on to commit a total of eighty-two sexual assaults, thirty-five murders, and thirty-five other violent crimes while the wrongfully convicted were incarcerated. Id.

35 Our Mission, NAT’L REGISTRY OF EXONERATIONS, http://www.law.umich.edu/special/exoneration/Pages/mission.aspx (last visited Apr. 7, 2019). The Registry was founded in 2012 in conjunction with the Center on Wrongful Convictions at Northwestern University School of Law. Id. The Center for Wrongful Convictions has also been a leader in the nationwide movement to reform the criminal justice system since 1999. Ctr. on Wrongful Convictions, Bluhm Legal Clinic, About Us, NW. PRITZKER SCH. LAW, http://www.law.northwestern.edu/legalclinic/wrongfulconvictions/aboutus/ (last visited Apr. 7, 2019).

36 Exonerations by Contributing Factor, supra note 31.

Utah, and Wyoming. RMIC is a non-profit organization that works to correct and prevent wrongful convictions. RMIC plays a key role in advocating for criminal justice reform legislation in Wyoming, and were vital in exonerating Andrew Johnson.

B. Compensating Exonerees

After exoneration, an exoneree typically has three avenues to recover for a wrongful conviction: civil litigation, private legislation, or statutory compensation.

For the civil litigation avenue, an exoneree may file a civil rights lawsuit when they believe state agencies are responsible for their incarceration because of unconstitutional acts. However, these claims are rarely viable because many exonerees are wrongfully convicted without constitutional violations. Plus, proving culpability in these claims can be extremely difficult, costly, and time consuming.

For the private legislation avenue, state legislatures may pass private bills to directly compensate a specific individual. Those who receive this type of compensation are often well-connected and have a case that has been highly publicized and politicized in the media. For those without any political or legislative connections, this process can be lengthy, expensive, and even impossible. Most exonerees lack these influential connections and are in need of money right away, rendering private bills an inefficient way to compensate exonerees.

40 Id. (estimating that there are hundreds of innocent prisoners in Nevada, Utah, and Wyoming, and explaining the RMIC’s mission is to bring representation and legal services to those individuals).
41 Our Exonerees, Andrew Johnson, supra note 14.
44 Armbrust, supra note 42, at 162.
45 Id. at 161–66 (noting that many state actors are protected by qualified immunity doctrines).
46 Id. at 166.
47 Id.
48 Id. at 167.
49 Id.

https://scholarship.law.uwyo.edu/wlr/vol19/iss2/8
Through the last avenue, exonerees in states with compensation statutes can file a claim for compensation directly through the statute. Thirty-three states currently have compensation statutes. Most wrongful conviction scholars support and prefer statutory compensation over civil claims and private bills for the reasons explained above.

Compensation varies amongst the states and at the federal level. Federally, exonerees have received compensation through a statute since 1948, which initially compensated exonerees up to $5,000 per year of incarceration. In 2004, Congress passed the Justice for All Act with bipartisan support, compensating exonerees $50,000 for every year spent in prison and $100,000 for every year spent on death row. The Innocence Project also uses this federal scheme for its recommendation for states; however, it has adjusted the amount for inflation with a current recommendation of a fixed sum of $63,000 per year of incarceration.

State compensation rates vary significantly between the amount paid and how the amount is calculated. On one end of the spectrum, some statutes do

---

50 Id.
51 See Compensation Statutes, supra note 21.
52 Daniel S. Kahn, Presumed Guilty Until Proven Innocent: The Burden of Proof in Wrongful Conviction Claims Under State Compensation Statutes, 44 U. MICH. J.L. REFORM 123, 123 (2010) (“[S]tate compensation statutes offer the best path to redress because they do not require the claimant to prove that the state was at fault for the wrongful conviction and because they are not susceptible to the same political influences as other methods of compensation.”).
55 Justice for All Act of 2004, 108 Pub. L. No. 405, 118 Stat. 2260 (2004). The Justice for All Act has been described as “[a] remedial act designed by a fair-minded government as a means of at least partially righting an irreparable wrong done to one of its citizens. It has the beneficent purpose of attempting to compensate, as well as money can compensate for such an injury, the plaintiff for the loss of his liberty through an error on the part of his government.” Osborn v. United States, 322 F.2d 835, 839 (5th Cir. 1963).
56 Compensating the Wrongly Convicted, supra note 37.
not provide much financial relief at all.\(^{58}\) Equally on this end are the statutes that have difficult barriers to overcome in order for the exoneree to be eligible for compensation.\(^{59}\) On the positive side of the spectrum, the best statutes provide comprehensive and significant relief without substantial barriers.\(^{60}\) Since the quality of monetary support and reentry services vary greatly among the states, Wyoming is in a unique position to learn from both imperfect and effective compensation statutes.\(^{61}\)

III. WYOMING’S INNOCENCE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY: A TIMELINE

The Innocence Project examines states’ statutes that prevent wrongful convictions and those that enable exonerations.\(^{62}\) This is because, in many cases, in order for an exoneree to receive compensation for a wrongful conviction, statutory avenues must first exist to be exonerated for a wrongful conviction.\(^{63}\) Wyoming provides two statutory avenues through which the wrongfully convicted can prove their innocence and overturn their convictions.\(^{64}\)

\(^{58}\) See generally Compensation Statutes, supra note 21. For example, Montana only offers educational aid to exonerees and no monetary compensation. MONT. CODE ANN. § 53-1-214 (2019). Wisconsin offers $5,000 per year of incarceration with a cap of $25,000. WIS. STAT. § 775.05 (2018). Oklahoma pays only up to $175,000. OKLA. STAT. tit. 51, § 154 (2019).

\(^{59}\) See generally Compensation Statutes, supra note 21. Tennessee gives exonerees only one year to file after exoneration. TENN. CODE. ANN. § 9-8-108 (2019). Additionally, many states will only compensate if an exoneree is officially pardoned, regardless of innocence. ME. STAT. tit. 14, §§ 8241–8244; N.C. GEN. STAT. §§ 148-82 to -84 (2012).

\(^{60}\) See generally Compensation Statutes, supra note 21. For example, in Texas, exonerees are paid $80,000 per year of incarceration, including fractional sums for partial years incarcerated. TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 103.052 (West 2017). The money is not paid in a lump sum, but rather through annuity payments. Id. Additionally, claimants are eligible for 120 hours of tuition, or a bachelor’s degree, at a public Texas university. Id. Exonerees are extended temporary housing, career counseling, and other vital resources. Id. Uniquely, every exoneree in Texas is assigned a case manager who helps him obtain medical and dental services. Id. The case manager also provides support and assistance in filling out applications for federal entitlement programs, such as Medicare and Social Security. Id. Most importantly, the case manager helps the exoneree obtain vital mental health support and generally helps him transition back into the community. Id.

\(^{61}\) See, e.g., Innocence Staff, Governor Signs Gold-Standard Wrongful Conviction Compensation Law in Kansas, THE INNOCENCE PROJECT: NEWS (May 15, 2018), https://www.innocenceproject.org/governor-signs-wrongful-conviction-compensation-law-kansas/. For example, Kansas is the latest state to enact a compensation statute. Id. Kansas was able to use the legislation from other various states to create a “gold-standard” statute. Id.

\(^{63}\) Id. (describing the statutes the Innocence Project screens for eyewitness identification reform, recording of interrogations, post-conviction DNA testing, new non-DNA evidence and changes in science, evidence preservation, and exoneree compensation).

\(^{64}\) WYO. STAT. ANN. §§ 7-12-303, -401, -407 (2018).
A. 2008: Post-Conviction DNA Testing

In 2008, Wyoming became the 43rd state to enact a post-conviction DNA (PCDNA) statute. The Joint Interim Judiciary Committee established Wyoming’s bill with help from the RMIC. The statute enables a convicted defendant to file a motion for post-conviction DNA testing if the evidence has the potential to establish the movant’s actual innocence. The Act also establishes a procedure for the preservation of biological material. This statute is important for the wrongfully convicted who have evidence that has not been tested with the latest DNA technology. Without this statute, Andrew Johnson would not have been able to prove his innocence and be exonerated.

B. 2014: Senate File 28 and Senate File 30

In 2014, the Joint Judiciary Interim Committee, again working alongside the RMIC, attempted to pass two more innocence statutes. Senate File 30 (SF30), titled “Compensation for Persons Exonerated Based on DNA Evidence,” would have been Wyoming’s first compensation statute for exonerees. Its companion bill, Senate File 28 (SF28), titled “Post-conviction Actual Innocence,” would have... provided a path for a new trial of a wrongfully convicted person based on newly-discovered, non-DNA evidence.\textsuperscript{73}

When SF30 was first introduced in the Senate by the Joint Interim Judiciary Committee, the bill provided that a petitioner would be eligible for compensation if a court had entered an order of actual innocence and exoneration pursuant to Wyoming’s PCDNA.\textsuperscript{74} An order of actual innocence and exoneration would be granted through the PCDNA statute after DNA results came back to prove innocence.\textsuperscript{75} The Senate increased compensation per day from $75 to $100, and capped the total at $500,000.\textsuperscript{76} The compensation would be given in the form of an annuity of $50,000 per year until the total compensation amount had been paid.\textsuperscript{77} Additionally, the petitioner could designate a beneficiary for the annuity in the event of his or her death.\textsuperscript{78}

However, on the last day of the 2014 Budget Session, both SF28 and SF30 were met with many changes by the House Judiciary Committee.\textsuperscript{79} First, an amendment to both bills was proposed that would require petitioners to first go through hearings to prove their innocence by a preponderance of the evidence, even after they already received an order of actual innocence and exoneration pursuant to Wyoming's PCDNA statute.\textsuperscript{80} This amendment was supported because of concerns that the PCDNA statute did not properly screen for "true" innocence, specifically in the case of Andrew Johnson.\textsuperscript{81} Second, an amendment

\textsuperscript{73} Wyo. Legislative Serv. Office, S.F. 28 Digest, 62d Leg., Budget Sess., WYO. LEG. (2014), https://www.wyoleg.gov/2014/Digest/SF0028.htm [hereinafter Wyo. S.F. 28 Digest]. This bill eventually failed. \textit{Id}. However, it was arguably a precursor for the factual innocence bill that was passed in 2018. \textit{See supra} notes 84–86.

\textsuperscript{75} WYO. STAT. ANN. §§ 7-12-401 to -407 (2018).

\textsuperscript{76} S.F. 30, 62d Leg., Budget Sess.

\textsuperscript{77} \textit{Id}.

\textsuperscript{78} \textit{Id}.

\textsuperscript{80} Wyo. S.F. 28 Digest, \textit{supra} note 79; S.F. 30, 62d Leg., Budget Sess. (engrossed version as passed by House, Mar. 5, 2014).

then lowered the maximum amount of compensation to $250,000, so it would mirror the maximum claim amount allowed under the Governmental Claims Act. The differences in SF30 between the Senate and the House caused the bill to fail, leaving Wyoming’s wrongfully convicted and factually innocent without compensation.

C. 2018: Determination of Factual Innocence

Despite the failure of SF30 in 2014, Wyoming passed the Post-Conviction Determination of Factual Innocence Act (PCDFA) in 2018. Under this statute, a wrongfully convicted person can file a petition of factual innocence even if they do not have DNA evidence in their case, but instead have other methods through which they can claim factual innocence. An order of exoneration is granted through the PCDFA if “factual innocence” is proven by clear and convincing evidence.

While both the PCDNA and PCDFA provide statutory avenues for the wrongfully convicted to prove their innocence, the state of Wyoming “should resist being lulled into complacency by the successes of the innocence movement and post-conviction DNA testing. The traumatic event of exoneration will remain isolated, rather than truly transformative, unless we attempt to remain faithful to it by continually pursuing new avenues for uncovering and correcting justice.” In order to do so, Wyoming must pursue the avenue of enacting legislation to compensate their exonerees.

IV. WYOMING MUST ADOPT A HOLISTIC COMPENSATION STATUTE

The Wyoming Legislature has made important strides for innocence work with respect to passing the PCDNA in 2008 and the PCDFA in 2018. However, 82 Wyo. S.F. 28 Digest, supra note 79; see also WYO. STAT. ANN. § 1-39-101.

---

83 See S.F. 30, 62d Leg., Budget Sess. (engrossed version as passed by House, Mar. 5, 2014); WyO. S.F. 28 Digest, supra note 79.
85 WYO. STAT. ANN. §§ 7-12-401 to -407.
86 Id.
87 Lyttle, supra note 67, at 632.
88 See infra notes 89–160.
89 See supra notes 84–87 and accompanying text; see also Wyoming Legislature Passes DNA Testing Bill, supra note 65 (explaining that Wyoming became the forty-third state with a statute the Legislature failed to fulfill its duty to compensate the wrongfully convicted when it failed to pass SF30 in 2014.90 As explained above, SF30 failed because the Legislature had three primary concerns: (1) uncertainty as to how much compensation a claimant should receive; (2) uncertainty as to the procedure and burden to place on the claimant; and (3) uncertainty as to whether the only known eligible claimant, Andrew Johnson, is “actually” innocent.91

A. Compensation Should Be Holistic

When SF30 was in the House, a legislator proposed to lower the cap to $250,000—the same amount as the Governmental Claims Act.92 The idea of lowering the cap to parallel the Governmental Claims Act was rejected by many.93 Two over-arching questions arose out of these debates: (1) what should compensation include, and (2) how much compensation should the exoneree be entitled to.94 To answer these questions, this Comment proposes that a compensation statute should provide holistic services on top of generous funds without being capped.95

---

90 Lyttle, supra note 67, at 627 (asserting that SF30 represents an important step for Wyoming in addressing the consequences of wrongful convictions); Kerry Drake, Wyoming Continues Down Path of Punishing the Innocent, WYOFILE (Apr. 7, 2015), https://www.wyofile.com/wyoming-continues-path-punishing-innocent/ (contending that Wyoming continues to “punish the innocent” in wake of SF30’s failure).

91 See supra notes 79–83 and accompanying text; see also Give Johnson the Money He Deserves, CASPER STAR-TRIB. (Mar. 18, 2014), https://trib.com/opinion/editorial/editorial-board-give-johnson-the-money-he-deserves/article_b59a0289-3a7b-553d-a9fa-6697efdb3671.html (explaining that amendments to the bill added a burdensome procedure for claimants while also implying that representatives questioned Andrew Johnson’s deservingness of compensation).

92 Archived Floor Debate: 2014, 62d Leg., Budget Sess., supra note 81 (at 00:06:40).

93 Archived Floor Debate: 2014, 62d Leg., Budget Sess., supra note 81 (at 00:08:30).

95 See generally Compensating the Wrongly Convicted, supra note 37 (explaining ideal factors in a compensation statute).
1. What Compensation Should Include: It is not Just About Money

Compensations serve many purposes, only one of which is to compensate exonerees for time spent outside of the labor force. More significantly, the purpose is to compensate for time spent outside of a free life. Exonerees have experienced profound and irreplaceable losses of liberty, life, relationships, and reputation. Exonerees often carry incalculable amounts of mental suffering and psychological harm, including enduring personality changes, post-traumatic stress disorder, depression, and other mood disorders. One court has described an exoneree’s experience as follows:

the claimant has been humiliated, degraded, shamed, and suffered a loss of reputation and earnings. For this he must be paid, and for this money damages can be compensatory. But all the wealth of the State of New York could not compensate the claimant for the mental anguish suffered through nearly twelve years of false imprisonment, under the impression that he would be there for the rest of his life. How can a man be repaid . . .?

To cope with these mental and tangible losses after being released from prison, exonerees need immediate access to housing, transportation, and general living expenses. Additional costs include medical and mental health care, retirement funds, insurance, education, job training, and other financial support.

---

96 See generally Leslie Scott, “It Never, Ever, Ends”: The Psychological Impact of Wrongful Conviction, 5 Am. Univ. Crim. L. Br. 10, (2010), https://digitalcommons.wcl.american.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1063&context=clb (detailing the extreme mental health and personal costs that stem from wrongful conviction). See also Adele Bernard, When Justice Fails: Indemnification for Unjust Conviction, 6 U. Chi. L. Sch. Roundtable 73, 107 (1999) (“Here the Court is called upon to determine the value of freedom as to this individual claimant in his enduring quest for freedom . . . . How does one place a monetary value on seemingly mundane things like sleeping in one’s own bed; a stroll through a park or a hug from a loved one. Yet, those are among the very things one longs for, and which are denied to a person in prison.” (alteration in original) (quoting McLaughlin v. State, No. 75123 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. Oct. 16, 1989))).

98 See generally Teressa E. Ravenell, Cause and Conviction: The Role of Causation in § 1983 Wrongful Conviction Claims, 81 Temp. L. Rev. 689, 691 (2008) (“Although wrongful convictions may be an inevitable consequence of our criminal justice system, it would seem that a person wrongly deprived of his liberty is entitled to a civil remedy to compensate for the mistakes of the criminal system.”); see also Adrian Grounds, Psychological Consequences of Wrongful Conviction and Imprisonment, 46 Canadian J. Criminology & Crim. Just. 165 (2004).

99 See generally Grounds, supra note 98.

101 See generally Compensating the Wrongly Convicted, supra note 37 (explaining ideal factors in a compensation statute).
to assist with obligations such as child support payments. Financially, many exonerees will have spent large amounts of money funding appeals and hiring attorneys. Emotionally, many exonerees will need ongoing treatment for post-traumatic stress disorder as they continue to suffer the consequences of wrongful conviction.

When deciding what amount is appropriate to compensate an individual, Wyoming must examine each individual’s specific situation and needs. For example, in Minnesota, a three-person compensation panel, appointed by the Chief Justice of the Minnesota Supreme Court, decides compensation claims. The panel considers economic damages, non-economic damages, and other reintegrative expenses. The Minnesota Legislature must then approve the panel’s findings and recommendations. A procedure such as this allows for a more individualized approach to compensation, with each exoneree’s specific needs being addressed.

Additionally, Wyoming must offer holistic compensation for exonerees dependent on the needs and specific situation of the exoneree. Holistic compensation examines the complex needs of exonerees and compensates for both financial and non-financial losses. The Innocence Project advocates for holistic compensation that includes the following: immediate provision of funds, housing, transportation, food, psychological counseling, medical and dental care, job skills, training, education, legal services to expunge criminal records, and legal services to regain custody of children. Wyoming can use similar services that are already being provided to parolees and simply extend these services to exonerees.

---

102 See id.
103 See Armburt, supra note 42 (noting that one exoneree that spent $200,000 in appeals).
107 Id. For example, this could include obtaining a college education for some exonerees who have time to start a career, or assistance obtaining social security and retirement benefits for older exonerees. See id.
108 Id.
109 See id.
110 See Gutman, supra note 105.
111 See Armburt, supra note 42 (explaining that holistic compensation recognizes and tackles health problems and education).
such as immediate access to housing and counseling services. Further, the statute must limit the taxation of the compensation, limit attorney’s fees, and provide a claimant-friendly statute of limitations for filing, which is at least a two-year limitation. A limit on attorney’s fees and a generous statute of limitations are simple ways the State can ensure that the system will not take advantage of an exoneree again.

2. A Cap on Compensation is Unwarranted

A limit on the amount of compensation is unnecessary and also unreasonably severe if a claimant has spent more time incarcerated than a sum of $100 per day up to $250,000. Additionally, while $250,000, or even $500,000, are significant amounts of money, this compensation is going to be a rare payout. This is not a negligence claim, but rather a wrongful loss of life and liberty claim. A compensation statute is a new policy that the Legislature has the opportunity to make a difference to an exoneree who has suffered a wrongful incarceration, and there is no justification or rationale to rely on an unparalleled statutory scheme like the Governmental Claims Act. In addition, these payouts would be rare.

---

114 See Bernard, supra note 96 (asserting that two-year statutes of limitations are standard and reasonable, but six months statutes of limitations are too short).

115 John Shaw, supra note 27, at 614 (explaining how one attorney who claimed $8 million in attorney’s fees from compensation claims in Texas fully took advantage of the exonerees).

116 See Bernard, supra note 96 (explaining that limits on recoverable damages discourages claim filings and is based on unfounded fears of straining state budgets when the number of wrongful convictions in any state is not high enough to warrant such restrictions).

117 See generally Radley Balko, Opinion, Report: Wrongful Convictions Have Stolen at Least 20,000 Years from Innocent Defendants, WASH. POST (Sept. 10, 2018), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/opinions/wp/2018/09/10/report-wrongful-convictions-have-stolen-at-least-20000-years-from-innocent-defendants/?noredirect=on&utm_term=.6754146ceefa (explaining the “enormous waste of human potential” wrongful convictions cause). See also Bernard, supra note 96 (contending that states may fear claims will strain state budgets, but the fear is unfounded due to the low number of wrongful convictions).

118 See Archived Floor Debate: 2014, 62d Leg., Budget Sess., supra note 81 (at 00:08:30).

119 Id.

120 Wyo. Legis. Serv. Office, S.F. 30 Fiscal Note, 62d Leg., Budget Sess., Wyo. Leg. (2014), https://www.wyoleg.gov/2014/Fiscal/SF0030.htm [hereinafter Wyo. S.F. 30 Fiscal Note] (“Wyoming experiences qualifying exonerations. Though there are no current measures that would allow for an accurate prediction of the number of individuals affected by the proposed legislation, it is assumed that the actual number of individuals affected would be very low.”).
The national estimates of wrongful convictions are 1–3% of all convictions. Current exoneration rates place Wyoming at below 1% of all convictions. Additionally, because DNA testing is now standard in criminal cases with victims, DNA exonerations should lessen significantly over time, leading to fewer wrongful convictions and, in turn, future exonerations. The criminal justice system is now aware of the leading causes of wrongful convictions, and as reform in these areas continue, wrongful conviction rates should fall along with exoneration rates, making compensation claimants more rare. A cap is not warranted because the budget will rarely be affected due to an already low number of claimants and a cap is ultimately unfair to the claimants who spent more time in prison than the cap compensates for.

B. The Process and Burden Placed on the Claimant Should be Minimal

When SF30 was in the House, representatives proposed two amendments that would require a movant who had already obtained an order of actual innocence under the PCDNA statute to undergo an additional hearing to determine if the movant can prove that they are factually innocent. An efficient compensation...
statute should not impose this additional burden on the claimant who has already received an order of innocence and exoneration.127

For those who have received an order of innocence through the PCDNA and PCDFDA statutes, an additional hearing is redundant, a waste of resources, and unnecessary since these statutes already adequately address concerns of mistake or actual guilt.128 The purpose of a compensation statute should not be to confirm innocence, but rather to simply compensate those already determined to be innocent.129 Foremost, the PCDNA statute has significant hurdles for a claimant to qualify for post-conviction DNA testing.130 Claimants must present a prima facia case showing that DNA testing would prove actual innocence before they can qualify for testing, and even then the court is not required to order testing.131 That prima facia case requires the DNA evidence to produce new, non-cumulative evidence, among many other high burdens.132 If a court grants the tests and the DNA results are inconclusive, the court must deny a motion for a new trial.133 If the DNA results are consistent with the movant’s claim of innocence,

---

127 Lyttle, supra note 67, at 629–30 (“As a matter of policy, requiring an exoneree to prove his or her innocence a second time is redundant and serves little purpose other than placing new burdens on people already irreparably harmed by the justice system . . . even worse, this procedure would shift all of the terrible costs of wrongful imprisonment onto an innocent person, presuming that person guilty until proven innocent and washing all of our hands of an injustice perpetrated on our behalf.”).

128 WYO. STAT. ANN. §§ 7-12-303, -402.

130 WYO. STAT. ANN. § 7-12-305 (“The movant shall be required to present a prima facie case showing that the evidence supports findings consistent with the facts asserted under W.S. 7-12-303(c) and DNA testing of the specified evidence would, assuming exculpatory results, establish: The actual innocence of the movant of the offense for which the movant was convicted; or [i]n a capital case: The movant's actual innocence of the charged or uncharged conduct constituting an aggravating circumstance; or [a] mitigating circumstance as a result of the DNA testing. If the court finds that the movant has presented a prima facie case showing that the evidence supports findings consistent with W.S. 7-12-303(c) and the evidence would establish actual innocence, the court may order testing, subject to W.S. 7-12-306.”).

131 Lyttle, supra note 67, at 612–13 (“The statute’s use of the word ‘may’ suggests the district court has discretion to order testing.”).

132 WYO. STAT. ANN. § 7-12-303. To file for post-conviction DNA testing, the movant must explain why the DNA evidence is material, that “the evidence is still in existence and in a condition capable of testing”, the chain of custody of the evidence, that it can be tested, the specific type of DNA testing requested, that the DNA test “employs a reliable scientific method”, that “a theory of defense can be presented not inconsistent with theories asserted at trial,” that the evidence was not already tested, and that the movant did not have his trial after January 1, 2000, and the movant did not “request DNA testing or present DNA evidence for strategic or tactical reasons or as a result of a lack of due diligence, unless the failure to exercise due diligence is found to be a result of ineffective assistance of counsel.” Id.

133 WYO. STAT. ANN. § 7-12-310(a).
that movant must then go through either a complete retrial with acquittal or a dismissal of the original charges before he or she can be declared innocent.134 Despite the PCDNA statute being in place for eleven years, only one person has been successful in proving his innocence through this method.135 The PCDNA statute already provides adequate safe-guards and procedures that an exoneree must adhere to in order to be proven factually innocent, all of which would occur prior to filing for compensation.136

The PCDFA statute provides the second statutory method for proving innocence in Wyoming.137 The PCDFA statute was not enacted at the time SF30 was proposed, but it creates another high-bar and burden for a claimant to prove his or her innocence that aligns with the proposed amendments to SF30.138 For petitioners to show a prima facie case of factual innocence under PCDFA, a claimant must show “that they not have engaged in the conduct for which they were convicted,” that they “did not engage in conduct constituting a lesser included or inchoate offense of the crime for which they was convicted,” and that they “did not commit any other crime arising out of or reasonably connected to the facts supporting the indictment or information upon which they were convicted.”139 A compensation statute must rely on innocence determinations made under the PCDNA and PCDFA statutes, which already have effective procedural burdens in place designed to cull non-meritorious claims and therefore not require a second hearing.140

Aside from the statutes in place in Wyoming through which the wrongfully convicted can establish their innocence, there are many policy considerations that weigh against imposing additional processes and burdens on claimants.141 First, the State, and not the claimant, has access to the evidence that resulted in the underlying conviction, requiring the claimant to go through the expense and burden of seeking further discovery or obtaining the prior evidence independently.142 If the State loses the evidence or witnesses become unavailable, the burden becomes 135 Our Exonerees, Andrew Johnson, supra note 14 (explaining Johnson is the only person who has been exonerated with the PCDNA statute).

137 Id. §§ 7-12-401 to -407.
138 Id.
139 Id.
140 See generally Kahn, supra note 52.
141 See id.
142 Id. at 148 (“Where this is the case, and all else being equal, the burden should be shifted to the party with the better access to evidence (i.e., the party with the lowest relative costs of production).”).
even greater.\textsuperscript{143} Second, the State is in a better position to prove guilt than the claimant is to prove innocence.\textsuperscript{144} Proving a negative—that the claimant did not commit the crime—is a significantly heavier burden than the burden of proof already required by the State at a criminal trial.\textsuperscript{145} Finally, removing the burden from the claimant would save judicial resources for the State and money and time for the individual, who has already been significantly wronged and lost irreplaceable amounts of time.\textsuperscript{146} To conclude, an additional hearing should not be required as it is inefficient, costly, and adds another layer of trauma on the exoneree.\textsuperscript{147}

C. Andrew Johnson and the State’s Responsibility to Compensate Exonerees

During debate in the House, SF30 met many roadblocks, in part because of apparent doubt on the innocence of the only current eligible claimant, Andrew Johnson.\textsuperscript{148} Despite DNA exonerations providing an empirically accurate showing of innocence, it can be difficult for many to accept that the criminal justice system wrongfully convicts.\textsuperscript{149} This difficulty can be the greatest for those who have spent careers and lives dedicated to the law enforcement system.\textsuperscript{150}

There is no doubt that the criminal justice system convicts innocent people.\textsuperscript{151} Indeed, a compensation statute is not about one citizen; it is a larger \textsuperscript{143} Id. at 149. “Because it would be easier for the state to prove guilt than it would be for the claimant to prove innocence, these same risks are less likely to plague the state if it had the burden of proof.” Id. at 152.

\textsuperscript{144} Id. at 151–52.

\textsuperscript{145} Cf. N.J. STAT. ANN. § 52:4C-1 (West 2019). One state openly recognized this in its compensation statute. Id. (“[I]t is the intent of the Legislature that the court . . . , in the interest of justice, give due consideration to difficulties of proof caused by the passage of time, the death or unavailability to witnesses, the destruction of evidence or other factors not caused by such persons or those acting on their behalf.”).

\textsuperscript{146} Kahn, supra note 52, at 152.

\textsuperscript{147} See id.

\textsuperscript{148} Archived Floor Debate: 2014, supra note 81 (at 00:46:24).

\textsuperscript{149} Lyttle, supra note 67, at 603 (“DNA testing and the innocence movement force us to acknowledge the existence and dignity of innocent convicts.”).

\textsuperscript{150} Id. at 607 (“Prosecutors face substantial institutional and psychological pressures to resist innocence and exoneration claims.”).

\textsuperscript{151} See, e.g., EDWARD CONNORS ET AL., U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE, CONVICTED BY JURIES, EXONERATED BY SCIENCE: CASE STUDIES IN THE USE OF DNA EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH INNOCENCE AFTER TRIAL (1986); Glossary, supra note 32. See generally Steven A. Drizin & policy decision that reflects how Wyoming chooses to treat those who have been irrevocably wronged by the criminal justice system. A compensation statute is not about blaming the State, but rather, recognizing that the State is the best party to assume liability for the most intrusive and worst form of state interference.

Multiple policy reasons support governmental compensation for victims of wrongful convictions. First, the government has the ability to shift the burden of a less-than-perfect criminal justice system from the wrongfully convicted individual to society as a whole. Next, compensating individuals is an important way for the exoneree to see that the government is taking responsibility for its actions and wrongdoings. In one study, compensated individuals were less likely to commit an offense after release, not only because they had compensation to meet practical needs, but also because they felt like they were valued and a part of the community. Compensation can also address many of the systemic causes of wrongful convictions by ensuring the government does everything possible to prevent wrongful convictions in the first place.

The State can bear the burdens of compensation, of a flawed criminal justice system, and of preventing wrongful convictions better than an individual can. Wyoming will most likely have very few eligible claimants and the cost of compensating them will be relatively low compared to the State budget.

V. Conclusion

Finally, I’ve come to believe that the true measure of our commitment to justice, the character of our society, our commitment to the rule of law, fairness, and equality cannot be measured by how we treat the rich, the powerful, the privileged, and the respected among us. The true measure of our character is how we treat the poor, the disfavored, the accused, the incarcerated, and the condemned.\textsuperscript{161}

A wrongful conviction devastates the criminal justice system while simultaneously harming the safety of the public, the victim, and the person held accountable for a crime they did not commit.\textsuperscript{162} Wyoming owes a duty to compensate people who are wrongfully convicted through a failure of the criminal justice system.\textsuperscript{163} To be sure, the State of Wyoming has taken great strides by providing the wrongfully convicted avenues of relief through the PCNDA and PCDFA.\textsuperscript{164} However, Wyoming must continue with these strides and implement a holistic and individualized compensation for its exonerees.\textsuperscript{165} The failure of the previous compensation bill was unfortunate, but Wyoming now has the opportunity to create a more effective and holistic statute that can lead the nation in how the State treats its exonerees.\textsuperscript{166}